Not a tent pole in sight

Camping isn't all about tents, as DAVID PAUL discovered when he booked into his luxury mobile home. What better way to sample the glamour of the south of France?

PAMELA Anderson, a 14ft snake and a bar where beer is £10 a pint are not the typical ingredients for a fun-filled family holiday. But, unlikely as it may sound, all three played their part in making a camping trip to the south of France something we will never forget. That's what you get when you book with Thomson Al Fresco, the firm that raised the bar for camping holidays a couple of years back with its terrific range of mobile homes.

We're staying at the Les Prairies de la Mer campsite at Port Grimaud – an hour's drive from Nice airport – although it seems a bit unfair to call it a campsite. Luxury is the byword here, so instead of a tent, you get superb accommodation that would cost ten times as much if it were part of a hotel – especially as we're on the Cote D'Azur at the height of the summer season.

The site is a little bit daunting at first – there are 1,400
